

Heather Cadwallader, the beloved wife of Ian who served with 74 Squadron from 1956 to 1968, died on 7th February. Although living in New Zealand Ian and Heather did attend a few reunions where they were able to meet up with their old friends from RAF days - the Robinsons, Hiltons and Southgates. Ian first met Heather in 1961 when he was a co-pilot on DC3s flying for NZ National Airways and Heather was - as referred to in those days - an Air Hostess and he actually proposed to her on a ferry flight in the cockpit of a DC3 when she was sitting on his knee! They were married in 1962 and had two daughters Cindy and Karen. Heather liked playing golf in earlier times and always enjoyed gardening, especially in the last five years of her life, living in their little cottage about 20 miles north of Christchurch. Her favourite flowers were roses. RIP Heather.
